But the treaty

Mr. Canning thought that the reasons he should give for not concurring with the motion, would be fatisfactory to the noble lord. It had been rumoured abroad that Mr. Er-Ikine had not departed from his instructions, he thought it was proper to prove to this country, to America, and to the world, that fuch a report was not founded in fact. fact, whether the arrangements he had made were or were not in conformity to the instructions he had received, was not the point in question; how far those arrangements might be improved, might hereafter be the subject of consideration. The papers already produced were, he thought, sufficient to substantiate the test of Mr. Erskine's having gone beyond his instructions. The propriety of giving those instructions might become a political question; but that the arrange ments he had made were unauthorised by the instructions he had received, the documents already before them, he thought, completely established. When the intelligence of the arrangements entered into with America first ent on France, she must share the fate of came over, not transmitted by the minister France; and if independent, she was the to government, but through the medium of more offensive to England, as voluntarily of the American papers, and by them immediately laid before the public, it only remained for ministers to establish a treaty, the conclufion of which the instructions given by them did not authorife or disavow it altogether .-It had accordingly been stated by them, that it was not fanctioned by the instructions they had issued, but nothing had been said with respect to the conduct of Mr. Erskine that could be avoided while they did justice to themselves. It had been said, that probably Mr. Erskine had received some verbal affu rances from the American government which, in his own opinion, might justify him in concluding such a treaty. He did not know what verbal affurances he might have received; but that verbal affurances should be taken in a question of such importance, he thought, was more than any government could expect, or that any ministers would consent to. Of the three points laid down as the price of the repeal of our orders in council, not one had been obtained by the treaty concluded by Mr. Erskine. Even the sine qua non of our propolitions had not been gained. With respect to England's being left at liberty to capture American veffels trading to the ports of our enemies, the accepting that as a concession was merely courtely on our part. Whatever might be the laws of America with respect to the belligerent powers, Great Britain could entorce her right of capturing neutral veffels refumed his feat he must however state, that his brother Jerome had become very peril blockade, and capture them she would.

B. DUKE, P. Washington, Mason c'ty, August 4th, 1809. 4te MY LOVE'S A VESSEL TRIM AND GAY.

My love's a veffel, trim and gay, Rigg'dout with truth and stor'd with honor; As thro' life's fea she cuts her way, All eyes with rapture gaze upon her. Built every wond'ring heart to please, The lucky shipwright's love and fancy,

From flem to flern fle moves with eafe And at her launch they call'd her Nancy.

When bearing up against life's gales, So well she stems the dangerous trouble I call her Anna as fhe fails,

Her form's fo grand, her air's fo noble. When o'er the trembling waves she flies, That plays and sports as she advances, Well said, my Nan," I fondly cries, As my full heart in concert dances.

In steering fails before life's breeze, So fweetly gentle is her motion; She's Ann—for as she moves with ease, She leems the queen of all the ocean. But when on Sundays rigg'd in stays, Like beauty gay and light as fancy, She wins my heart a thousand ways, I then delight to call her Nancy.

When laying on a tack fo near,
The breeze her milk white bosom filling, She skims the yielding waves so fleet, I call her Nance, my bofom thrilling Thus is she precious to my heart, By whate'er name comes o'er my fancy Graceful or gay; grand, neat or fmart, Or Anna, Ann, Nan, Nance, or Nancy.

Patent Hemp & Flex breaking Machine.
THE subscribers have purchased the right for the state of Kentucky of Thomas Cohoon's Patent for a machine, for breaking hemp and flax.

One of those machines is now in operation on Maddox Fisher's farm, near this place, and is found admirably to answer the purpose for which it was intended.

A machine with two breaks, is worked by one horse with ease, and requires six hands to attend One of the great advantages of this machine is, that it can be attended by women or boys, instead of men, and that a woman or boy can clean double the quantity of hemp or flax, which the most ablebodied man could do in the same time with a common hand-break.

A farther account of the machine is deemed un-necessary, as it is presumed that those desirous of purchasing rights, will wish to satisfy themselves by seeing it in operation.

Individual rights at twenty dollars, or rights for whole counties, may be procured by applying to of Georgia.
